Senator Hill has notified Senator Dubols that he intends to move to put lead ore on the free list and will attack the position of the Senate Finance Committee in levying a duty of three-courts of a cent per pound on that article. Senator Hill says that in the last Congress the House, overwhelmingly Demo-cratic, passed a bill for free lead ore, and yet the Senate committee disregards this and places a duty upon the ore. Some of the memous of the Finance Committee, in talk-ing of the matter, say they know that the in-tention of the New York Senator is to place them in a position of embarrassment. Sen-ators Dubois and Teller consulted with the members of the Finance Committee and as-sured them that they would defend the duty

BLANCHARD'S SPEECH ON SUGAR

He Arraigned the Republicans for Thei Past Attitude Toward Ris Industry-Teller on Financial Needs of the Country. Details of the Debate.

The pending amendment when the tariff bill was taken up yesterday was that of Mr. Aldrich, to substitute the McKinley rates on shotguns, rifles, and pistols for the rates in the bill. Mr. Teller (Republican, Colo.) took the floor and made a general arraignment of the Democratic administration, using Mr. Gorman's speech of Wednesday as his text, Mr. Gorman, he said, had hailed himself as a Moses leading his party out of the wilderness, but, unlike the old Moses, he proposed to participate in the triumph, Mr. Teller cared nothing about the triumph of Democracy, but he case to market and the consequent cessation of gold desire to address some remarks to Mr.

Here cared into by the railroad managers at Chicago, the easier tone of the sterling exchange market, and the consequent cessation of gold extensive. Gorman's prophecy of the prosperity that would follow the enactment of the present bill. The country was accustomed to hear prophecies in connection with pending legis-

He then proceeded at some length to point out how prophecy after prophecy made when the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law was before the Senate had the Sherman law was before the Senate and failed. The export of gold had not stopped. More gold had been exported this mouth than in any month for several years. The Tressury had been compelled to issue $50,000,000 of bonds. A solution of the monetary problem, he said, would alleviate the present distress and depression of the world.

Mr. Gordon asked whether Mr. Teller did not think that the removal of the tax on state banks would in a large measure solve the monetary question.

Mr. Teller replied that the relief offered by Mr. Teller replied that the relief offered by such an expedient would be only temporary, and would be confined to this country.

At the conclusion of Mr. Teller's remarks Mr. Blanchard (Dem., La) replied to a remark made by Mr. Hoar yesterday that the representatives of Loursiana had always been ready to vote for protection to their state and the South. He said the policy of the government back days a revenue duty. ment had always been to place a revenue duty on sugar down to 1898, when the tariff on sugar had been stricken down, deliberately, as he believed, because the enormous revenue obtained from a tariff on sugar, if maintained, would give the Republican party no oppor-tunity to raise rates on northern manufactures. In order to dodge the charge that in doing so they sought to strike down a great southern industry they had given the sugar growers a bounty. Louistana knew that the Fifty-first Congress could not fetter the hands of succeeding Congresses, and that ultimately the bounty would go and sugar would be left on the free list, to the injury and destruction of the sugar industry in his state, in which $100,000,000 was invested.

Mr. Plant followed Mr. Blanchard in a brief speech on the pending amendment.

Mr. Aldrich taunted Mr. Blanchard with inconsistency in having voted for free sugar In order to dodge the charge that in onsistency in having voted for free sugar and abolition of the sugar bounty in the Wilson bill as a member of the other House.

Mr. Hawley contended that the value of farm lands increases by the establishment of manufacturing towns in their vicinity. He wildows the contended that the value of the contended that the ridiculed the phrase "robber barons," as applied to the captains of industry who direct great manufactures.

The following rates were then fixed:

The following rates were then fixed:
The rate of 30 per cent, on shotguns, rifles, and pistels was agreed to, and then at the request of Mr. Jones the Senate went back to paragraphs 140 and 141. Mr. Vest offered a substitute for paragraphs 140 as follows: Table and carving knives and torks valued at more than $4 per dozen, and razor blades, scissors, and shears, wholly or partly finished, 45 per cent, ad valorem. All other table knives, forks, steels, etc., 35 per cent ad valorem. This was agreed to, as was Mr. Vest's substitute for the next paragraph as follows: Files, file blanks, rasps, and floats, of all cuts and kinds, four inches in length and under. 30 cents per dozen; over four inches in

This latter amendment restored the Me Kinley classification, slightly reducing the rates proposed in the Jones amendment. In paragraph 145 Mr. Aldrich's amendment was defeated and the Finance Committee rate Mr. Peffer offered a series of amendments to reduce the rate on cut nails, horseshoe nails, wire nails, spikes, etc., all of which were defeated.

The House rates on engraved steel plates and railway fish piates (25 per cent, ad va-lorem) were not changed. The rate on iron and steel rivers was increased from 25 to 30 per cent.

The Jones amendments were agreed to fixing the rates on crosscut saws at 6 cents per linear foot, will saws at 10 cents per linear foot, pit and dray saws at 8 cents per linear foot, circular and other saws at 25 per cent.

The rates on wood screws were fixed at 30 per cent., and on umbrella ribs made of iron and steel or other metals at 50 per cent. ad Paragraph 156, "wheels," was passed over.

The duty on crude aluminum was fixed at 10 cents per pound; on bronze powder or aluminum in leaf at 40 per cent. ad valorem.
Mr. Quay moved to amend the paragraph making gold and silver bullion dutiable at 26 making gold and silver bullion dutiable at 25 per cent, ad valorem, so as to make silver bullion dutiable at 100 per cent, ad valorem, this purposes was to iny a prohibitive duty against foreign silver bullion, but the amendment was rejected. The rates on gold and silver leaf were fixed at 30 per cent.

Paragraphs 165, 168, and 167, lead and the manufactures of lead, were passed over. The rate on metallic pens (except gold) was fixed at 8 cents; on pins and hat, shawl, and belt pins, commercially known as jewelry, at 25 per cent. Paragraph 171, "type metal," and paragraphs 174, 175, and 176, "zinc and the manufactures of zinc," were passed over.

paragraphs 174, 175, and 176, "zinc and the manufactures of zinc," were passed over.

The rate on chronometers was fixed at 10 per cent., and on watches and clocks 25 per cent. The rate on manufactured articles (paragraph 177), not specially provided for in the bill, composed wholly or in part of metal, was fixed at 30 per cent. Then at 5 o'clock the Senate, on motion of Mr. Jones, went into executive session, and at 5.10 adjourned.

values were the agreement to maintain rates entered into by the railroad managers at Chicago, the easier tone of the sterling exchange market, and the consequent cessation of goid exports.

The covering movement by the shorts was quite pronounced in Sagar, the Grangers, Chicago Gas, General Electric, Missouri Facific, and New York Central. There was good buying, too, for the London account in St. Faul and New York Central, while Beaton houses bought Burlington and Quincy and insiders were purchasers of Western Linion. The fluctuations in Sugar were very frequent, the outside ranges being 584 and 1025. After an opening rise of 45, a decline of 154 was made, followed by an advance of 584, and after each of 58, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 585, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 585, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 585, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 585, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 585, an improvement of 584, and a fluctine of 586, and inspection of 586, and inspection of 586, and inspection of 586, and the trading in those shares, the Buying being credited mainly to the old sugar pool, which acts as if it was certain the tariff bill would go intrough as amended in the Sonate.

Of the Grangers, St. Paul and Burlington and Quincy were in most demand, and considerable blocks were taken for the long account in the bellef that increased earnings would result from the settle ment of the rate question. Chicago Gas reacted 45 in the early deallars, rose 114, and then on sales to realize profits on a Boston account broke 514.

The lower range of values brought in rood buyers, and supporting orders were received from the west, which caused a steady advance of 586, the closing sale being at the highest point touched and 156 shows yesterdays final quota. The general market opened firm and a shade higher, and during the first hour the tread of prices was upward. Then came a fractional reaction, after which the specification was fairly steady until about 11,30 ofcoix, when Nat

It Was Not a Counterfeit. R. E. Preston, the director of the mint, resterday received from a special examine of customs at El Paso a 95-gold piece, with a request for a decision as to its genumeness, request for a decision as to its genumeness, the inspector stating that it was the ordence acainst a party accused of passing counterfeit gold coin. Director Preston observed that the coin lacked sonority, and from its genuine appearance suspected that owing to too rapid rolling of the gold strips preparatory to cutting the planeters an air buoble or blister was formed just at the spot in the strips from which the coin was cut. With a steel ink eraser Mr. Preston split the coin far enough to ascertain that his diagnosis was correct. It is stated that these slight imperfections occur occasionally, especially when the strips are rolled rapidly. The coin will be returned with a statement that it is genuine.

What appeals to me as my most interesting experience as a writer occurred a Winter or two ago in a little lumber hamlet of the full region of Kentucky. For a moment, at least, it was quite thrilling—rather too thrilling, it was quite thrilling—rather too thrilling only the usual features of life, and this little episode, though it was pitifully commonplace in its gettine, had shout it something that read to my answer the shout only unusual, but nearly sublime.

I had gone down to the village in question with the ambitious design of seeing a "tide" in the river. Tides are peculiar to winter, months. This tragic narrative, which the innkeeper related with the equanimity of an epic poet, recurred to me vividly as I observed the man by the stove.

He was middle aged. The story lay fifteen years behind him, but he had a chin which made me believe the innkeeper an honest chronicier.

He was stolid and well fed. Apparently life had laid no heavy penalty upon him.

He seemed too vulgar and heavy a type of humanity to invite exceptional treatment of fate, yet I saw him that night in rather a fate, yet I saw him that night in rather a notable situation.

Just after dark the innkeeper and his daughter and I set out across the cliff path to see the river in active operation. We walked in the wind's teeth, with a splitting rain in our faces. It was cold and bleak. Then in an instant the river flashed in sight. Its whole freshet-swollen current flamed with red from countless fire baskets and lanterns. Long shafts of vermilion stabbed the packed timber in the boom, struck across the climbing hanks, and made fiery lances of the pike poles in the loggers' hands.

Men were leaping about on the logs. In a flare of crimson I saw on the wedged float the man who had been Ida's lover. He was

Some one stamped noisily into the other room and asked for whisky. I glanced out. It was the mill man of Idy's infatuation. He flung himself at length on a bench behind the cook stove and lay with shut eyes. His clothes were dripping with thin mud, and an air of utter weariness pervaded his attitude.

He had scarcely looked at the boomhouse man. I glanced at him, however, and became aware that his aspect had changed. Something like life shone in the pale eyes under that unkempt hair. He was standing still, just staring with a half-blind gaze at the man on the bench.

me soon or late," said the old man, simply.
"I waited. They sin't nothin' to say. You know what you're dyin' for."
The whole thing was singularly passionless and without any aspect of tragedy. On the stove a panful of meat crackled. Notsee from outside came distinctly. The candle flickered and east a thread of light on the lifted face of the man on the bench.
I myself had a sense of inability to move or speak. The innkeeper's girl stept on. Whatever consciousness I had seemed to be in the millman's frame, passively awaiting a sharp, metallic click. There was no chance at all for him. He seemed to see this and to take it calmly.

man. I gianced at him, however, and became aware that his aspect had changed. Something like life shone in the pale yes under that unkempt hair. He was standing still, just staring with a half-blind gaze at the man on the bench.

Suddenly he stopped forward like a shadow. "It's you, isn't it?" he said.

The man on the bench shot round a startled gaze. He saw the revolver in the lean hand leveled toward him. He must have recognized Idy's father in the figure standing over him, sternly poised as to a deed of necessary vengeance.

"I knowed God A'mighty'd give you up to lead to to the sound we man the sound we man the same fall slowly against his side. "I ain't going to kill you," he muttered, "You got a daughter. Go and see as no black-hearted villain steals her from you."—
